All last night was was waiting. Totally dry. The power plant plume never started extending. I was out at Anttilanvaara and called it a wrap at 0430. No diamond dust except for one very local and very poor swarm that came from the steaming pile of a wood chip factory in the vicinity of the landfill. The only documentation I took was this car roof subparhelia when I was starting out just before eleven. I am panning to the left side because a similar display earlier this winter had some white arc there (I didn't take documentation then). Nothing there, nor on the opposite side view. The temp at Anttilanvaara was -30 C when I left. It is a bit elevated location so it is not a cold spot.
