Guns were on all night (7/8 February), with pressure air on. I started at around 1730 and decided to wrap it up at 02 because it was so poor. The stuff was mostly higher up. I hauled the gear back to apartment and returned out to move the car to the parking slot. But during those couple of minutes I was in, the action had started properly. Pillars all around. No choice but haul the gear back to car and get going. What it got then was the display in this video. It just went on and on. Judging by the crystals I scoped, this was mixture swarm from ski center snow guns and Suosiola plume. There were also bottle crystals. The display wouldn't stop, but I thought I had worked on it enough and returned back to apartment at 0630. The temp was -35 C when I left but it felt oddly warm. I think I read it wrong and it was -25 C. This would be in line with Apukka station, which always has pretty much the same temps that I get.
