I thought I still had one surface display waiting to be stacked but for the life of me couldn't find it – until now. It is a display on 19 February 2024, at Lietesaari, Rovaniemi. A short note on the visual is found in an earlier post (<https://t.co/S5KcA7HlgJ>) : "The display itself was very poor, it took some time before I could discern 46° halo, about the 22° halo I could not say for sure. But I expect it to come out in the stack."

Indeed, in the versions of the average stack the 22° halo is clear and also weak 24° halo is present. And the max stack, which is always close to visual impression what comes to the halos that were possible to see, is vague on the 22° halo.

All are versions of a 246 frame stack.

The great majority of the surface displays were odd radii last winter. I need to see at some point what's the final tally.
